After conning the family inheritance from his older, brutish brother, Jacob must run for his life! He escapes to live with his uncle Laban, a wily businessman and father of two daughters. Leah, the older, is frumpish and squints a lot since glasses haven't been invented. But, ah, Rachel, the younger daughter is a beauty, a sight to behold!

Laban insists that Jacob work for him before arranging the marriage. So, for seven long, lonely years Jacob deals with dusty sheep and dim-witted herders while dreaming of his wedding night. But what is this? Jacob discovers the woman under the veil was not the ravishing Rachel but Leah. When confronted, Laban feigns surprise at the "slight misunderstanding." He then cons Jacob into more servitude to gain Rachel as well.

Years later Jacob and his wives are the parents of 12 children (at last count!).

The music includes a variety of styles, but given his situation, Jacob tends to sing the blues a lot.
